

AMY YEE

Amy Yee is an award-winning journalist who has written for New York Times, Economist, NPR, Scientific American and 30+ media outlets. She is a former Financial Times staff reporter based in New York and New Delhi.

She has reported from India, Bangladesh, Nepal, Pakistan and 10 countries in Africa. Amy has won the UN Correspondents Association three times; South Asian Journalism Association awards four times; top prize from Association of Healthcare Journalists for analysis about preventing child deaths in Bangladesh and India; and honorable mention from Society of Environmental Journalists for climate change solutions reporting.

Amy focuses on solutions to social problems and marginalized communities. She has the most articles (75+) in Solutions Journalism Network's tracker besides SJNI's founders.

Amy is a graduate of Harvard Kennedy School, Columbia Journalism School where she was a Knight-Bagehot Fellow, and Wellesley College. She is a member of Asian American Journalists Association's Media Watch Committee. You can learn more about Amy at amyeeewrites.com or follow her on Twitter @amyeeewrites.